Classroom Discussion: What Makes a Canadian?

What is a Canadian? Is the Canadian identity our flag, the sports we play, our money, our history? When others think about Canada, their thoughts might include hockey, the maple leaf, the hunting of seals, the RCMP, or snow and cold temperatures.

Spend some time thinking about what a Canadian is. Then, answer and/or discuss the following questions. If you are in a classroom, discuss the questions as a group. If you are working individually, write your answers on the lines provided and check your work with your learning facilitator or teacher.

1. Does where you live in Canada affect your idea of what a Canadian is? If so, how?

Answers will vary. Students could respond based on a rural vs urban viewpoint. They could respond based on their heritage if they are French, First Nation, a recent immigrant, etc.

Some students who are new to Alberta could also bring different viewpoints.

2. It has been said that Canada is a mosaic of cultures while the United States is a melting pot of cultures. What is the difference? Do you agree that Canada is a mosaic of cultures? Why or why not?

A mosaic allows each culture to maintain its identity and blends in with the rest of the cultures to allow a Canadian culture to emerge.

In a melting pot all the cultures sacrifice their individual identities to form a new culture.

Answers will vary regarding agreement with the statement.

Reading 1: Rebellion in the Thirteen Colonies

During the early 1700s, the thirteen British colonies grew rapidly. By the 1750s, the Thirteen Colonies were ready to expand. They looked to the west and thought the Ohio River Valley would be an excellent area for expansion. Then in 1774, Britain passed the Quebec Act. The Act gave control of the Ohio Valley to Quebec. The Thirteen Colonies were already upset with Britain for restricting trade, for high taxes on imported goods, and for the restrictions placed on their ability to make decisions. The Quebec Act's restrictions to the Thirteen Colonies' desire to expand into the Ohio Valley was the last straw. Within a year the American Revolution began. The Thirteen Colonies thought Quebec would join them in their battle against the British.

Read pages 125 to 128 in your textbook, Voices and Visions, to see if the Thirteen Colonies were right. You will also discover how people who remained loyal to king of England were treated in the Thirteen Colonies and how this affected Quebec and Nova Scotia. Then, complete Activity 1.

Activity 1: Rebellion in the Thirteen Colonies

To complete Activity 1, use the list of words provided to choose the best word to complete each statement. The words will be used only once. Not all the words will be used. If you are working in a classroom, you may discuss this activity. If you are working individually, complete the activity and check your work with your learning facilitator or teacher.

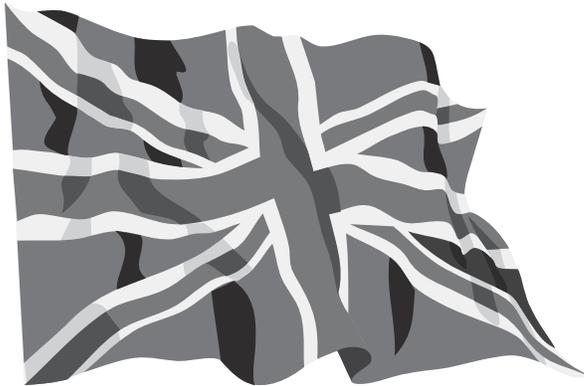

Cape Breton Island	liberators	Montreal	New Brunswick
Prince Edward Island	rebellion	refugees	Sir Frederick Haldimand
Sir Robert Semple	traitors	Loyalists

- When American rebel forces invaded Quebec, they thought the Canadiens would see them as liberators.
- Not all the people who lived in the Thirteen Colonies wanted to rebel. Many of them remained loyal to Britain. They became known as the Loyalists.
- The American rebels treated the Loyalists as traitors.
- Nearly 40,000 Loyalists became refugees and moved north to British North America.
- Many of the Loyalists who moved to Nova Scotia were unhappy with the lack of opportunities. The British decided to divide Nova Scotia into two parts. The western section became known as New Brunswick.
- Britain also renamed Ile Saint-Jean to Prince Edward Island.
- In Quebec, Governor Sir Frederick Haldimand provided the Loyalists with land along the northern shore of Lake Ontario.

Reading 2: Land, Identity, and the First Nations

With nearly 40,000 people moving north into British North America, Britain had a major accommodation problem. The problem was solved in the Maritimes by splitting Nova Scotia. This allowed many of the Loyalists to settle in New Brunswick. In Quebec, Governor Haldimand had two problems. The first was what to do with nearly 2000 Mohawk First Nation people who had remained loyal to the king of England. The Mohawk leader Thayendanegea demanded the British give them the land Britain had promised. The second problem was what to do with the thousands of British Loyalists who did not wish to remain in Quebec.

To find out what the governor did and how it affected First Nations people, read pages 129 and 130 in your textbook, Voices and Visions. Then, complete Activity 2.

Activity 2: Land, Identity, and the First Nations

If you are working in a classroom, you may discuss this activity. If you are working individually, complete the activity and check your work with your learning facilitator or teacher.

1. a. What land was the Mohawk First Nation promised for helping the British? What happened to this land?

The British promised the Mohawk First Nation land west of the Mississippi River. The British gave the land to the Americans.

- b. Was Thayendanegea successful in getting land for the Mohawk? If so, where was the land located?

Thayendanegea was successful. The Mohawk received land located along the Grand River, north of Lake Erie.

2. Why did the Anishinabe First Nation agree to give up their land to Governor Haldimand for so little in return?

The Anishinabe did not believe that land was something to be bought and sold. They thought they were only giving permission to use the land. The Anishinabe may also have feared that they would be removed from the land if they did not agree, which would be similar to the displacement of First Nations people in the south by the United States.

3. How did Britain solve the problem of the desires of the British Loyalists and the French Canadiens to maintain their separate cultures?

The British divided Quebec into two colonies. The colony west of the Ottawa River became Upper Canada and was made up mostly of British Loyalists. East of the river became Lower Canada, and it maintained the rights gained from the Quebec Act of 1774 including French language and civil laws. This allowed both French and British cultures and languages to co-exist.

Reading 3: The War of 1812

In 1812, war broke out again between the United States and Britain. The British were fighting the French and stopped the Americans from trading with France by using a naval blockade. At the same time, the British navy took American sailors to serve on British ships. The British encouraged First Nations in disputes over land with the Americans. The Americans believed that British North America colonists would join them and attempted to take control of the British colonies.

Read pages 131 to 133 in your textbook, Voices and Visions, to find out the results of this conflict. Then, complete Activity 3.

Activity 3: The War of 1812

For Activity 3, complete the following statements. The answers can be found in your reading, “Conflict Renewed: The War of 1812”. If you are in a classroom, you may discuss the statements as a group. If you are working individually, write your answers on the lines provided and check your work with your learning facilitator or teacher.

1. Britain stopped the Americans from trading with the French because Britain was at war with the French.
2. The Americans were upset that Britain was kidnapping American sailors to serve in the British navy.
3. The British worried about the loyalty of the colonists living in British North America.
4. Tecumseh, a Shawnee leader, fought and won many battles for the British.
5. The War of 1812 ended in a deadlock.
6. The Treaty of Ghent required both sides to return any territory they had gained.
7. The Americans and the British agreed to make the 49th parallel of latitude the political boundary from west of the Great Lakes to the Rocky Mountains.
8. The First Nation allies suffered more casualties than the British and Americans combined.
9. The Americans refused to create a First Nations state.
10. Laura Secord became a hero when she overheard an American plan to attack and hiked more than 32 kilometres to warn an outpost.

Reading 4: Great Migration

After the War of 1812, Great Britain encouraged people to immigrate (to move to a new country) to British North America. Hundreds of thousands of immigrants left Britain and came to this new land in the early 1800s.

To discover why so many people came to North America during this time and what happened to them, read pages 134 to 137 in your textbook, Voices and Visions. Then, complete Activity 4.

Activity 4: Great Migration

Based on your reading, answer the following questions. If you are working in a classroom, you may discuss this activity. If you are working individually, write your answers on the lines provided and check your work with your learning facilitator or teacher.

1. Why were people encouraged to immigrate to North America? Identify three reasons that encouraged them to come to North America.

Possible answers include the following: 1. In Britain the population grew faster than jobs. 2. Farmers were forced off the land. 3. Poverty and hunger were common. 4. With peace, ocean travel was safer. 5. The colonies offered free land, new opportunities, and a chance for a better life.

2. Why did people from Ireland consider 1847 as the Terrible Year?

In 1847, a major potato crop failure in Ireland caused widespread starvation. Then, a typhus epidemic broke out aboard ships headed for North America. Thousands of Irish settlers died before they had a chance to settle in North America.

3. The rapid increase of British settlers to British North America changed the identity of the colony. Identify three of the changes that affected the colonies.

Possible answers include the following: 1. They opened vast areas for farming. 2. New industries emerged. 3. New towns were built. 4. Job opportunities increased for doctors, teachers, loggers, miners, and labourers. 5. The newcomers brought a British flavour to the new communities with British customs, traditions, games, and language.

Reading 5: Divided Society

With the rapid growth of people from Britain, the original colonists felt overwhelmed and threatened. Britain appointed a governor for each colony. The governors and their friends ran each colony. They failed to listen to the concerns of the colonists. The colonists asked for reforms in the way the colonies were governed. When Britain failed to accept the reforms, the colonists turned to rebellion.

Read pages 139 to 144 in your textbook, Voices and Visions, to see how the rebellions resulted in reforms that led to responsible government. Then, complete Activity 5.

Activity 5: Divided Society

Below are five multiple-choice questions. Read carefully. Write the letter of the best possible answer in the blank before each question. If you are working in a classroom, you may discuss this activity. If you are working individually, complete the activity and then check your work with your learning facilitator or teacher.

1. The United Empire Loyalists had several reasons for opposing a war against the British. What were three of the reasons? (3 marks)

Answers may include the following: 1. Some did not believe in using violence to settle disputes. 2. Some had business ties with Britian. 3. Some had fought with the British in past conflicts. 4. Some were enslaved African-Americans who looked to the British for their freedom. 5. Some were First Nations people who had lost their land to the Americans.

3. In 1837, two rebellions broke out. One was in Lower Canada and the other was in Upper Canada. Why did these rebellions occur? Who were the leaders and what did the rebellions accomplish? (4 marks)

The British government decided to find out why the rebellions had occurred and this eventually led to Canada receiving responsible government.
